

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

There were about fifty people in the community who helped with this project. To express our thanks each person will receive a copy of this book.

We would like to offer special thanks to those elders who helped repeatedly: Katherine Mills for being our general reference person, George and Jessie Dalton for over the years instilling in this teacher a sense of appreciation for Tlingit culture, Rose Thompson for allowing herself to be questioned over and over by students and teacher, Mamie Williams who made the pictures of her late husband available and gave us the cover story, Ida and David Kadashan who took the time twice to come to the school to advise this author, and Captain Don Gallagher who also was questioned many times concerning boats, canneries and transportation in this area. Also special thanks go to Mrs. Fred Matson author of Happy Alaskans We for sharing with us her rich local knowledge.

To all who furnished us with pictures we thank you. We hope we have used them wisely.

Editors Note: Even in a work so modest as this, the editing was monumental, but I enjoyed every minute of it. While my Alaska History students did most of the original research, I found it necessary to do a major part of it myself. Often times the elder to be questioned would not take the young researcher seriously enough to entrust him with pictures and materials. In a few cases the student researcher handed me a paper that obviously contained little to no truth - these I re-researched. Yet, in a work of this nature there are bound to be omissions, mistakes, and perhaps downright untruths. For these I sincerely apologize and ask you the reader to come forward with the proper information and if there are enough corrections and additions to merit it, we can try to get a revised edition of this book out next school year. In order to complete this book in one semester in a classroom situation, I had to assume an almost reckless attitude in the editing of this work.
